I had prepared the following post for Spitfire' thread, (http://www.sermonindex.net/modules/newbb/viewtopic.php?topic_id16348&forum35) Chilling words.. and discovered th at it got locked in the meantime, so I will post here. This is in response to comments about the various ways people h ave been interpreting the media presentations of the gunman, Cho:

Sure there are the masses of people who find the press releases about Cho quite enthralling, and will fixate on that. Th ey sit back in their armchairs, and cluck their tongues and shake their heads saying, "Shame, shame on that maniac . (Thank God I'm not like him)." They don't care to understand more than that. They will never learn a thing from wh at they are watching on the TV. (mind you, the media does tend to sensationalize these kinds of things, which doesn't help).

Quote:
----- Cho was demon possessed.

I find this "diagnosis" unhelpful, and I suspect, uninformed.

Thankfully there are always some whose consciences are touched:

I agree (!!!) We do have a responsibility to influence our world – by touching individuals with Christ's love. Yet, I am aware that the challenge is enormous. It's like trying to hold back the ocean after the dam has burst. The needs in our society are overwhelming. But at least, a "cup of water" is better than nothing. And that's all we are called to give - on behalf of Christ.
