Might I highly commend to all on Sermon Index the following sermon by Art Katz for this holiday season: And They Crucified Him.

I remember listening to this quite some time ago. I definitely remember it being a very good message.

Indeed, it was a very challenging message to listen to again. I found it very fresh and full of life. Art always amazes me. Though Pentecostal in much of his theology, he seems everything but. No doubt, his message would probably bore many classical Pentecostals to tears, as it is delivered in a soft and slow style, and not the spit & slobber style of many. Not that there is anything wrong with such a delivery method, but, this message is of such incredible depth and penetrating insight that I fail to see how one could "rev it up." Indeed a message with such weight and density must be delivered with tender care by the speaker, and not the flash pan explosive style of somebody such as Leonard Ravenhill.
