Do you trust Google?, on: 2011/9/22 3:27

Do you realize that if somebody doesn't like you, all they have to do is pop in your name on a forum (a forum like this) or on their own web site or a friend's web site, and you're name is going to come up with a link to their comments?

Check out what some homosexual guy has done with the name Rick Santorum. But anybody that doesn't like you, could do the same thing. The Google bots will pick up your name and post a link to the profane or slanderous comments.

Quick story. I started posting on the TCU board around 2002/2003. My original handle was "Endzone Ticket to V-Zone Seat". I would buy a $10 endzone ticket and then move to the V-zone which was near the 40 yard line. Then a few folks suggested my handle was kind of long, so I just shortened it to "Endzone".

$10 ticket for end zone seats? For who? The Detroit Lions??

(yes, I know, Detroit actually looks good this year)

To clear up some confusion about the original post. Apparently someone wishing to smear Rick Santorum has posted lu de comments about him on forums so that when people do a Google search for him those comments will show up.

With the search capabilities of Google, people are figuring out ways to abuse it.
