LA MIRADA, Calif. (Christian Examiner) -- If California Democrats have their way, Christian colleges and universities will no longer be allowed to require students attend chapel services or require them to profess a relationship with Jesus Christ.

Senate Bill 1146 would close a loophole that lawmakers say allows Christian universities to discriminate against students based on their gender identity, gender expression or sexual orientation.

"All students deserve to feel safe in institutions of higher education, regardless of whether they are public or private," said Senator Ricardo Lara, the author of the legislation. "California has established strong protections for the LGBTQ community and private universities should not be able to use faith as an excuse to discriminate and avoid complying with state laws."

The legislation has already passed the Senate and is expected to clear hurdles in the Assembly. Thus far, Lara has refused to compromise with the state's Christian colleges and universities.

"No university should have a license to discriminate," he said in a statement.

Lara is an out homosexual and is a power player on moving that agenda forward. He is militant about it.

I still maintain that EVERYTHING in American politics about LGBT is really to promote Islam. Lara is a pawn and does not even know he is being used. The tyranny of Islam will overtake the homosexual agenda here in time. Until then, Islam leverages the pro-LGBT sentiments and popular sentiment and leftist voting blocs to dislodge Christianity from the American conscience. When Islam is through with men like Lara they will dispose of him like they do from high rooftops a broad.

Thanks for the information.

Here's a thought: Conservative states could separate from the USA... I'm not saying that this solution would not have some serious social and financial repercussions, but it may still be an option worth considering.

Food for thought.

Social and financial repercussions will be worse if we stay. Maybe we will see a breakup like the USSR.
